This unit will teach you how to configure your pricing and set the translation templates you will offer

Configuring your pricing

You can offer template translations and full translations on AcudocX. Each of our templates allows you to set a default price or a custom price.

All providers must set their own pricing within the system. AcudocX does not control your price of translations other than implementing a $14.95 minimum for the system to function.

Why can't a provider set a price below $14.95?

Pricing for templates

- You will be asked to enter a price for a Self-Service Extract and Standard Extract default price.
- A self-service translation is a time-efficient service for providers. Your customers will complete part of the translation process: first uploading their documents, then selecting and translating the fields, before it is sent to you for review.
- A standard translation only requires customers to submit their documents, before it is sent to you to translate and complete.

How does a self-service translation work?

The customer uploads, selects fields, then translates their documents before sending it to the provider for review

The customer ONLY uploads their documents before submitting the job to the provider

Full translations are exact replications of the foreign-language document, translated into English. Everything is included in the translation. This is suitable when full translations are stated as being a requirement.

Pricing changes on draft and inactive jobs

- Jobs submitted by the customer operate on a timer system.
- Draft jobs created are set to expire after 72 hours, at which point the job will become inactive and will require the customer to reactivate the job before they can proceed.
- Pricing changes will apply to all new and reactivated jobs. If you make any pricing changes and the customer's job has become inactive the customer is required to agree to any pricing changes before reactivating their draft job.
